Smyrna Horror Described by Atlantan John S. Owens

Jr., Writes of Horror to Parents Here (an excerpt from a long article)...

There was a Japanese warship in the harbor, Contrary to the action of every other man-of-war in Smyrna, this warship took board every refugee it could possibly find room for. There was also a cargo boat from Nippon there. When it saw this, it dumped a large part of its cargo overboard, and took off all the refugees and carried them to Piraeus. American, British, French and Italian, and everybody else told the refugees that they could only take their own nationals on board, and it remained for the lowly Japs to prove their mettle...
